

I oppose the relaxation of rules about media ownership consolidation. I believe that the number of news outlets (radio stations, television stations, newspapers, etc.) owned by any individual, family or company should be strongly limited. Ownership and control of news and information should not be in the hands of a few, but rather be highly diverse, thus enabling a wide range of opinions and ideas to be expressed freely. The FCC and the federal government have a responsibility to all the people of the United States to make sure that excessive consolidation of media ownership and control does not occur.
